The War News.

Dates from the seat of war come down to the 18th. The dispatches require sifting, and close sifting, to get anything like a correct idea of the whereabouts of the opposing armies Since our last review of the war there has been some changes in the relations of the Freuch and Prussians. The French line extends from Thionville, close to the line of Luxemburg, to Metz; from there up the Moselle to Ponta-a-Mousson, on the railway connecting Metz and Nancy. Nancy having been evacaated, the French have taken up a stronger position a short distance from it at Toul, on the railroad from Nancy to Chalous. From Toul to Strasbourg communication seems to be partially interrupted. Above Strasbourg, towards Switzerland. Mulhausen. on the Rhine Switzerland, Mulhausen, on the Rhine railway, was first reported in possession of the French, but later in the hands of the Prussians. Through this line, it is evident the Prussians have penetratedfor Prussian troops have been seen in Soane, and are reported at Commercy and Verdun, between Toul and Metz on one side and Chalons on the other. It appears that there are several places between the French line and frontier still held by France, and among them Bitche Strasbourg has received 30,000 of McMahon's force, it is said. That there has been important battles fought in the neighborhood of Metz, there is no doubt whatever. The telegrams first announced that the French would fall back from Metz to Chalons. They crossed to the left bank of the Moselle, on the 14th, as though they intended to do so. Their advanced guard then met the Prussians. This very clearly shows that the latter had got between Metz and Chalons, and probably occupied the line along the river Meuse. But the result of the fighting on the 14th and 15th, and concluding with the battle of Gravelette on the 16th, shows that the French, by luck or stratagy, got the best of the Prussians. To what extent it is impossible to say, from the meagre news in the telegrams. But judging by the arrival of ten thousand wound ed at Chalons, and the request of Prince Charles for a truce, or armistice to bury their dead, there must have been a terrible slaughter. The Prussians were evidently exposed to an attack from the direction of Chalons as well as Metz. The Prince, however, was in a position to demand a truce, but the refusal of the French to grant it indicates that they had gained the advantage. The Prussians had evidently tried to cut off Chalons, but failed, and suffered severely in the attempt. It don't seem, however, that a very decisive victory crowned the French arms. If that were so, it would have been announced at Paris, in all probability. But, instead of that, the dispatches sent to Paris were reported to be "important and satisfactory" on the 18th—yesterday. The London dispatch of the 17th that states that the French bad received a coup de grace—a death blow—and were in retreat on Verdun, is not well supported. Paris dates of the 18th gave it evidently a flat denial. The as sumption of the Governor-Generalship of Lorraine and Alsace, by King William, gives ground for the belief that they are occupied mainly by Prussian troops. The war is being waged as a means to an end; the end is peace; and after three days' fighting there don't seem to be any grounds on which to base hopes of speedy peace yet. France cannot consent to peace without a victory. Peace without victory would be humiliation. The war then is still likely to go on till French arms are crowned with glory, or till France can make pace without humilia-

A Hard Case.

It is surprising how much petty tyranny is perpetrated in this community ! The refusal of Messrs. Trimble, Macdonald and Pemberton to grant Stevens a license is a case in point. If they had offered any reason for their refusal anything on which to ground a refusal—there would be a shadow of justification for their conduct. But we find no color of reason at all. On the contrary, the case of Stevens was deferred to learn how the case of Stevens was deferred to learn how the appeal on the sailor-harboring case, on which he had been convicted, would go on appeal. The Chief Justice decided against the Stipendiary, Mr. Pemberton, and freed Stevens of the conviction, or fine of $50; yet the very next day but one afterward, Messrs. Trimble, Macdonald and Pemberton find it convenient to refuse him a license, after he had been declared innocent. What consistency is there in this decision? Whilst the innocence of Stevens is doubtful he is all innocence of Stevens is doubtful, he is allowed to sell. When his innocence is placed beyond doubt, he is not allowed to seil.

Now, as the facts of the case have come before us, we have no opinion to express on the conduct of the Bench, except that their re-fusal is a piece of petty tyranny. It is no use moderating language by saying it is an error of judgment, which no doubt it is; for that error is practical tyranny. If the magistrates have good cause to refuse a license, why did they not say so. Why deprive Stevens of his right to make a living as an Stevens of his right to make a living as an innkeeper? Everybody who has stopped at his place has been treated politely; the bar and table are as good as any outside of Victoria. The house is a public convenience; then why shall the public be put to inconvenience and Stevens be deprived of the ordinary right of a citizen? Why shall this petty tyranny be continued?
